Los Angeles, CA, Apr 19 -- West Coast Aerial Photography, Inc., today announced that it has been featured in an article entitled Shutterbugs in the Cockpit on FlightMonkeys.com, a general aviation blog. Touching on a variety of topics, from the 2011 F-18 Rose Bowl flyover image to a brief history on West Coast Aerial Photography's President Mark Holtzman, the FlightMonkeys article Shutterbugs in the Cockpit gives its readers behind the scenes access to one of aviation's more peculiar professions.

Or as FlightMonkeys puts it, "This family business is an outstanding example of how unique aviation businesses can be. [Mark Holtzman and his son] also stand out as a fantastic example of how creative people can get when left to their own devices."

FlightMonkeys was created by Jamie Beckett, a veteran on general aviation reporting and flight instructor. Based in Florida, a hub for general aviation and general aviation enthusiasts, FlightMonkeys couldn't be closer to the action. Florida is renowned for its reputation as the sunshine state, as well as being home to Sun 'n Fun, an annual fly-in and air show that attracts visitors and aircraft from all over the world.
